

we're on.

News from Rockall! We're going through exciting times—our crowdfunding campaign needs some dear love, our village has been constructed and our programme is finally becoming a reality. Read below what's been going on.

As we've launched our first programmed evening and been toiling away to get the site ready in time, we've not had the time to give our crowdfunding campaign the attention it deserves.

We'd like to remind you again that we've organised some pretty cool rewards for you support—which is still very, very much needed! Check out the link below to visit our Karolina Fund page and see what you can pick: among others, a coffee cards, sticker packs, furniture and a complete and exquisite dinner. Know that your support will be used well in order to make the best out of Rockall, and that we appreciate it terribly!

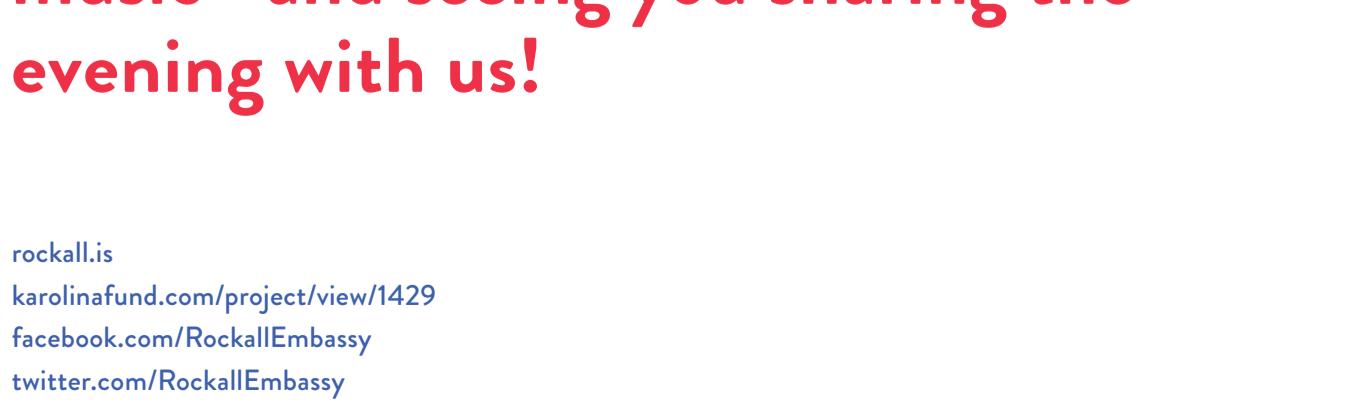

what happened.

Last Friday we had our opening evening at the Travelling Embassy of Rockall.

It was simply fantastic. We've been working on the project for a few months already without it really being "out there", and having put in immense labour especially the last two weeks to get the physical site ready, celebrating all that work with friends and guests was truly amazing. The mayor officially opened Rockall and gave us some words of wisdom. Our faces looked tired, but for all the right reasons, he said. We can't agree more with this. We had music and dance as folks arrived, passed by and left, giving us the opportunity to show what we hope Rockall will mean to people throughout the summer. On Saturday our dear friend Teitur Magnusson performed in the setting sun, closing a weekend of pride and smiles. Now we've our space open and inaugurated, we're all the more excited about the next weeks!

This week we're starting off easy with a laid back music session Wednesday evening to soundtrack the sun attempting to set: according to the weather report we ought to have clear skies again. In the meanwhile, until Friday, our crew is hard at work together with the volunteers of World Wide Friends to tidy up the place and build more tables, benches and improve the structures. We're building a voting box this weekend for visitors to share their thoughts in, and we're going to see if we can get some hammocks around the place too. Friday evening we've a programme of performances again. Two Icelandic names feature on our bill, the first of which is ÍRIS, an electronic musician and vocalist from Reykjavik. She released her first album "Penumbra" in 2013 and is hard at work on her new EP, of which she will perform material at Rockall. She'll be followed by Mikael Lind, who is based in Reykjavik too. Lind has graduated from the University of Edinburgh with a degree in electronic music production and is now busy crafting his own place and sound through music. His ambient music has been featured in mixes alongside Autechre and Plaid, seamlessly blending his sound into a landscape of electronic titans.

We're looking forward to hearing their music—and seeing you sharing the evening with us!
